JUST JUSTICE

"You shouldn't have come back to town," said Sheriff John Glaser. "It can't do any good. What's happened can't be undone. When we collected the money and sent you to St. Louis we figured we were doing a good deed."

"Was it really a good deed?" challenged Edith Miller. "Or was it to sort of sooth your conscience. Maybe my father wasn't guilty and never should have been hung."

"Let's get one thing straight, Miss Miller," insisted the sheriff. "I wasn't involved in what happened in any way. I was at Fort Carson in the military hospital. When my horse threw me my leg was in a bad shape. I had to stay there until it healed. I really can't say what would have taken place had I been here. I liked your father. I just couldn't see him as a killer and a murderer. But then the jury brought in the verdict and he was hung. All the time I was away."

"If that's the way you feel, then certainly you can't object to me coming back to town. Let me tell you just what happened to me while on that train to my aunt in St. Louis. Opposite me there was a captain in the United States Army. Maybe you know Captain Michael Dun. He was there with his mother. I was nothing but one big bunch of tears. She did her best to comfort me.

When the train stopped we got off and somehow she learned the entire story from me. She and her son were also going to St. Louis. So he came to see me several times and said he would do his best to help me. It won't be able to bring back my father. But if there was a miscarriage of justice then those responsible for it should be made to pay the penalty. So he communicated with some friends and this is what he learned.

Fred Riffler of the Bar-X Ranch was one of the men who testified against my father at the trial. He swore that my father had killed Ben Stoooper. Also that my father had a branding iron and was changing the mark on a steer when surprised by Ben Stoooper. There was a fight and Ben Stoooper was killed. Backing up that story were Pete Bicks and Harry Kane. Suppose for a moment that Fred himself was a rustler. He sold cattle to the United States Government for the use of the Indian Agency.

If that cattle were stolen then the United States Government is interested."

"It sure is," said the powerful voice of a big man wearing the uniform of a captain. He came in through the half open door of the sheriff's office. "So you can see Sheriff, why I got special permission to be around here. Two weeks to find out if anything was wrong in the sale of the cattle."

"And at the end of two weeks, if you don't turn up anything, you are going to leave?" asked the sheriff.

"That's correct," replied the army officer. "But somebody else will continue to stay around. I know Sheriff Pat Garrett so I wrote to him and asked if he could send somebody to help me. Maybe he is a young fellow in your eyes. Hasn't even shaved the first hairs off his face. But already he's got a reputation for wanting to see justice done. And he can back it up with only his six shooter but also his brains. So that makes quite a remarkable combination. And one hard to beat no matter how good a hand a man thinks he has."

It was late in the afternoon of the next day that Pete Bicks went out to the Bar-X Ranch to see Fred Riffler.

"I already heard the news," said his companion in crime. "She is back in town. And got an army captain and some young kid to help her. Now just keep calm. Remember that a legal court found Miller guilty of murder in the first degree. So he was hung. As long as we stick together nothing can help. But we have to keep an eye on Harry Kane. When he drinks too much his tongue is apt to wag a bit."

"And if it should begin to say things that shouldn't be said, then what do we do?" demanded Pete Bicks.

"They say that dead men can tell no tales, was the grim answer. "I'm not going to let him put a noose around my neck. And I figure you feel the same way. Better he should be dead then we should be."

At that very moment Captain Dun and the kid were in the town bank. The Captain handed Walter Sacks, president of the bank, an order from the territorial Commissioner of Banking.

"According to this you have to show us your books and help us with what we want to know," explained the army officer. "Here are the three names. We are interested in how much money, if any they deposited in the period of time specified on the paper."

"I have no choice but to obey," replied the bank president. "I can have all the information you want in fifteen minutes."

He only needed ten minutes for it and then he asked one important question.

"I assume you want to keep quiet about all this?"

"On the contrary," said the kid. "We want you to talk about it and keep on talking. Until it gets back to the ears of those three men. And makes them worry."

Three days later, The Kid walked into the Glory Cafe. He had been shown the three men and he went over to a table where Harry Kane was sitting and drinking from a bottle.

"I'll make what I say plain and to the point, Mister. And if you don't like what I say just keep both hands on the table. Because if you go for your gun you'll be dead in half a second. You earn money doing odd jobs on the ranch. Sort of an extra hand for Fred Riffler. You don't play cards at all. Yet I know how much money you put in your bank account. Did it come from helping this fellow Fred do some rustling? He sold those steers to the United States Government. Want to talk to me about it."

Harry Kane said nothing. The Kid arose from the table and turned his back on the man. Walked slowly to the door to leave. Harry Kane went for his gun. Took it out of the holster and aimed. As though the Kid knew just what was going to take place, he threw himself to the side. The bullet crashed into the bar. Twice the Kid fired his six shooter. He put a bullet into the shooting arm and the right leg of Harry Kane. Then he went to the office of the Sheriff to report what had happened. He met Captain Dun there and the two went to the Glory Cafe. Somebody sent for Doc Wilson and they took the wounded man to the physician's office.

"You could have killed him in self defence," said the sheriff.

"Why did you only wound him?"

"Want him alive," was the explanation. "Alive he can talk. We can learn nothing from him dead. Keep him here. And this should worry the other two. Maybe we can set a trap. Send a deputy out to see those two men. Tell them you want them in your office by tomorrow noon. If they are going to do something it should be to this one on the bed."

Pete Bicks rode right over to the ranch to see Fred Riffler right after the deputy had told him to come to town the next day.

"What are we going to do?" he wanted to know.

"They are holding Harry Kane on a charge of attempted murder. No way he can bear that. And no way we can help him which might make him sore. We should have gotten rid of him before. We ride into town late tonight. He will be in the doc's office. Can't move him yet. So we finish him off. Remember, dead men tell no tales."

Harry Kane was unable to sleep. It was two in the morning and he felt the pain in his wounded arm and leg. There was a dim light in the room from the half shaded oil lamp. He was conscious of a noise. The door opened and he saw his two friends.

"Glad you came," he managed to say. "Get me out of here. I don't want to go to jail."

"You won't go to jail," half whispered Pete Bicks as he took out his gun from his holster. "Anyway it looks like you are in pain and this should relieve it. It will only take just one minute and then all your troubles will be over."

"But then your troubles will begin," remarked a voice from behind the screen in the corner of the office. "Drop that gun to the floor."

Pete Bicks fired at the screen but he was too late. The Kid had stepped aside and fired once. A corpse hit the floor.

"Don't shoot me," shouted Fred Riffer. "I'm not trying anything. Don't shoot me!"

In half an hour the stage would leave town. Sheriff John spoke to the three who were departing.

"I guess we can all feel better now. The two will face trial next week for murder in the first degree. Even though it meant hanging himself, Harry Kane told all. Figured the only way he could get even on Fred. Your father's name has been cleared up. What are your plans, Miss Miller?"

"We are going to be married at Fort Henderson," said Captain Dun. "Billy can't come to St. Louis and we want him at the wedding."

"I don't figure I'll ever see Pat Garrett but if I do I got to tell him that the Kid is more man than any man I ever met," was the reply.

Until recently the process of hypnotic induction was largely based on trial and error methods which succeeded mainly with subjects who were highly susceptible to hypnosis in the first place. The truth is that these highly susceptible subjects make up a very small percentage of the population. That is why amateurs and beginning hypnotists have so often been disappointed in their attempts at trance induction. Now, however, recent scientific research has developed ENTIRELY NEW METHODS that are not only sure fire in their results but quick and easy to achieve! For the first time, these new methods are presented in HOW TO HYPNOTIZE in language that you can easily and successfully follow on the very first reading!

Photographically Illustrated
40 photographic illustrations show how you can achieve trance induction in as little as 30 seconds!
